Perspectives on Feminist Science Studies
Feminist analysis shaped the foundations of science studies as scholars from history, philosophy, sociology, anthropology, literature, and women's studies brought their expertise to bear on science, technology, and medicine. This panel will feature a new generation of scholars engaged in feminist science studies in the Five College area. Banu Subramanian (University of Massachusetts), Jennifer Hamilton (Hampshire College), Sarah Richardson (University of Massachusetts) and Marjorie Senechal (Smith College) will discuss their research and recent trends in the field of feminist science studies.

Where are we Now? Women and American Politics
A discussion led by Robin Leeds, senior political strategist, organizer and advocate with more than 30 years of work in the government, labor, business and non-profit sectors. As the Obama Administration pushes for women's rights internationally under Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, we will take the opportunity to assess the situation for women in the United States and to think about where we would like to see it going. Leeds will present her assessment of the current Administration's actions.
